The history of Building something better

Since its inception in 1950, General Coach Canada has been a distinguished manufacturer in the RV industry, creating unique Canadian products with global applications. With over 73 years in operation, General Coach has manufactured all types of recreational units and evolved through the eras of change.

In 2010, General Coach Canada became a privately owned company. The Faulkner Family, led by Roger Faulkner and his son Chris Faulkner embarked on their vision of Building Something Better. Over the years they have successfully branched out into several unique markets including, but not limited to Park Models, Manufactured Homes, Rental Cabins & Office Trailers. In 2019 they expanded their production capabilities by adding a 40,000 sqft facility, which operates the Travel Division – manufacturing Citation Travel Trailers & Truck Campers, Portable Washrooms and a line of custom Theatrical Trailers that are shipped globally. Not long after this, Roger’s daughter Heather Millar joined the management team and has become an integral part of operations.

The slogan serves as a testament to the company’s unwavering pursuit of improvement in every aspect of its operations, from design and construction to customer satisfaction. By embracing the ethos of “Building Something Better,” General Coach Canada not only reflects its ambitious spirit but also instills confidence in customers, assuring them that they are investing in a product that surpasses expectations and sets new benchmarks in the industry.
